

A THOUSAND SPLENDID SUNS

SYNOPSIS OF THE OPERA

Music by Sheila Silver

Libretto by Stephen Kitsakos

Based on the novel by Khaled Hosseini

Summary: 'A Thousand Splendid Suns' is the story of two women, born a generation apart, one an uneducated bastard child and the other an educated modern beauty. Fifteen years apart, each is married to the same brutal man, Rasheed. Cold to one another at first, they bond in a loving mother-daughter relationship and make heroic sacrifices for one another as war surrounds them, their husband's abuse mounts, and patriarchal oppression is on the rise. A story of love and passion, two heroines emerge as symbols of the universal bond that exists between women.

More depth:

Fifteen year old Mariam, the cast-off bastard child of a rich father, is forced to leave her rural home after her mother's suicide, and marry a middle-aged cobbler from Kabul named Rasheed. Alone, scared and forced to wear the burka, something unfamiliar to her, she tries her best to be a dutiful wife, but is unable to conceive a child. She lives a loveless existence with a husband who abuses her regularly for her failure to give him a son.

Years later, as competing factions of sectarian warlords secure a stranglehold on Kabul, a bomb explodes in Mariam's neighborhood killing the parents of fourteen-year-old Laila, a modern, educated, ravishing beauty. Rasheed brings the wounded girl to his home and Mariam, reluctantly, nurses her back to health. Rasheed, a sixty-year old man, schemes to get Laila to marry him by concocting a story that her beloved fiancée, Tariq, has been killed. Laila, secretly carrying Tariq's child, agrees to marry Rasheed, hoping to create a safe haven for the child.

At first Mariam is cold to Laila, but gradually the women bond over Laila's baby, a girl named Aziza, as well as their hatred of Rasheed, who abuses them both psychologically and physically. Eventually the Taliban rise to power and life in Kabul becomes more oppressive. When the two wives and Aziza attempt a daring escape from the city they are caught, escalating Rasheed's abuse and anger. Although Laila eventually gives Rasheed the son he has always wanted, the violence continues.

The turning point comes when Tariq, Laila's beloved, returns to Kabul and finds her. Rasheed learns of Tariq's visit to the house and in an act of extreme rage, begins to strangle Laila. Mariam, refusing to stand silent, saves Laila's life by hitting Rasheed on the head with a shovel, killing him.

Mariam convinces Laila to flee with Tariq and Laila's two children while she, Mariam, will remain to take responsibility for Rasheed's death, knowing that she will be sentenced to death. As Mariam walks to her execution, an understanding of her life brings her a sense of self-worth and spiritual peace: finally, she has loved and been loved... she has saved Laila's life. She knows that Allah will forgive her.

Bansuri soloist* (plays 6-8 different bansuris)

Tabla soloist* (plays 4 tablas (F, C, C#, Eb), Baya, mini-Dholek, Daf (frame drum), Udu (Ceramic middle Eastern drum) 1 Tibetan singing bowl

*The two Hindustani instruments are not part of the regular flute/percussion sections. They are “non-Western soloists.” They each need separate amplification and in addition, the bansuri needs reverb. They need to be miked, not only so that they are heard in the hall, but so that the rest of the orchestra and singers can hear them. In addition, they need a monitor or an ear feed so that they can hear the singers and the other members of the orchestra. There are many solutions to how this can be achieved. Ideally they should be close to the conductor in the pit but it is conceivable that they could be onstage, depending on how the director wants to use them. Since their parts involve varying degrees of improvisation and depending on whether or not they have performed the opera before, they may need to be included in the rehearsal process from the beginning with the singers.

Total:

32 strings, 17 winds, + 4 -- 1 piano/celesta, 1 harp and 2 percussion
